

The future of biofuels – jatropha and algae

Princeton Club, New York City - 25th September

Objective Capital, in association with Emerging Hi-Growth Sectors Conference, will be presenting our 'Topics in Industry' series event on 'The future of biofuels – jatropha and algae?' at the Princeton Club at 1.15pm on Thursday 25th September 2008.

With soaring oil prices, and debates raging on how to reduce carbon emissions, many are looking to biofuels as a renewable and clean source of energy. A number of governments have even set ambitious targets for their use.

But biofuels have also been linked to rising food prices and concerns over their real environmental impact are now spurring moves in the UK, Europe and the US to slow their introduction.

Are biofuels "deforestation diesel" as some would say or, as a United Nations expert described them, a "crime against humanity"? Is there a "good" biofuel and where should investors be looking in the industry.

The event forms part of our ongoing series of 'Topics in Industry' presentations for professional investors and analysts. The programme for the event has been designed to present an insight into the opportunities in the biofuels arena with an opportunity to hear first hand from companies operating in the area. We encourage you to take the opportunity to meet the company speakers, all of who are senior directors of the company presenting. Each speaker has 30 minutes to tell us about their company.

If you are interested in attending the presentation or the full Emerging Hi-Growth Sectors Conference please contact Gabriel Didham on 1-888-802-7215.
